WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure aloft is of moderate strength over northern California today, but it will briefly weaken Thursday while a weak Pacific weather system moves into Oregon. That disturbance will cause a period of increased Northern California cloud cover late tonight and Thursday. Cloud cover will be most extensive in the north, and there might even be a few light showers in the counties bordering Oregon. However, the eastern Pacific ridge rapidly rebuilds on Friday, and then expands northeastward to dominate Northern California weather this weekend. Friday p.m. through Sunday will again have much warmer than normal temperatures, unseasonably low humidity, areas with poor overnight relative humidity recovery, and light to locally moderate northeast to east-southeast winds. The upper ridge axis shifts to the east of California late Sunday into next Monday, allowing a moist south-southeast flow to advance moisture up from Baja and Southern California into North Operations. Confidence isn't very high yet, but we see signs on mid-range weather models that it might be the start of 4-10 days-duration wetter pattern.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Surface high pressure over Idaho will bring north to east winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph to the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California through Friday afternoon. This surface high will strengthen causing the offshore winds to increase to 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph Friday night through this weekend. Gradual warming along with low humidity will occur away from the Central Valley through this weekend as high pressure aloft slowly approaches Northern California. Temperatures will reach the low 80s across the lower elevations of Southern California this weekend. Cool temperatures and high humidity will remain over the Central Valley through this weekend due to continued widespread low clouds and fog. Subtropical moisture will be drawn northward from an area of low pressure that will form off the Baja Coast bringing showers to the region early next week. Showers will start over Southern California Monday morning and reach the northern parts of Central California by Monday night.
